Abstract

Conventional banking has played an important role in the financial system. However, there is a need for an Alternative banking system. Conventional Banking heavily relies on interest for all the banking products, which has become a burden on humanity, thereby seeing frustration, deaths, increase in poverty. Islam guides us to Alternative banking, which is Islamic banking which is an interest-free banking system based on the Islamic Shariah principles. This research paper analyses and compares the pros and cons of conventional and Islamic banking systems.

Biography:-

I'm a dynamic and versatile professional with a passion for both microbiology and Human Resources in the fast-paced industry of IT/ITES recruitment. With a degree in Microbiology and an innate curiosity for understanding technology, I embarked on a unique career path that seamlessly merged these two separate fields.

After completing my Master's degree in Microbiology, I valued the transformative power of technology in the scientific domain. Eager to learn more about the connection, IT/ITES recruitment, which is where scientific knowledge and technological aptitude could meet.

I had left an indelible imprint on the recruitment landscape over the past 7 years.

Throughout my career, I have honed a set of irrefutable skills, from writing interesting job descriptions that attract the best candidates to cultivating relationships with clients and candidates alike. My dedication to maintaining broad industry knowledge has positioned me as a trusted advisor to both hiring managers and aspiring professionals.

I'm a hardworking, trustworthy, and reliable source, comfortable working with teams and as individuals.
